There are some 114 hawker centres in Singapore and countless more kopitiam, each with their own unique character and stories. After rounds of dining restrictions, visiting a new stall and even revisiting an old favourite can be a pretty daunting endeavour. Was that great otah stall with the sky blue signboard situated along the second row of Old Airport Road Food Centre, or was it the third? What if the signage has changed, and you don't remember the name or stall number? Would it be still the same auntie uncle making the same roasted mackerel delights that they've painstakingly refined over the years?
